Abstract
Japan was one of the recipients of U.S. financial and technical aid during the first 15 years after World War II. In my talk, I will analyze three major U.S. foreign aid programs that involved Japan during the early postwar period - the GARIOA/EROA funds, the 3CT training program, and the productivity improvement campaign - and argue that Japan's experience as an U.S. aid recipient was essential to the nation's future role as an aid provider to Asia.

*Dr. Higuchi has contributed many chapters and articles on various issues such as nuclear safety, environmental policy, Cold War history, etc. He is a co-author of The Rise of Asian Donors: Japan’s Impact on the Evolution of Emerging Donors, edited by J.Sato and Y.Shimomura, 2012